

SENATOR GRUNDY BROADCASTS SPEECH IN APPEAL FOR SUPPORT OF VOTERS IN CONTEST FOR SENATORIAL NOMINATION

Bristolian Says Issues Have Been Brought Before the Voters and He Stresses the Tariff as Being Intimately Related to All — Living Standards Higher Here Than Abroad and Thus Production Costs Are Greater.

Speaking in a clear voice which could easily be understood Bristol's distinguished citizen, Senator Joseph R. Grundy, last night, broadcast over a state-wide hook-up of radio stations. The speech was the concluding one of Senator Grundy's campaign for nomination as the Pennsylvania candidate for United States Senator. The stations over which the talk was carried included WCAU, Philadelphia; KDKA, Pittsburgh; WHP, Harrisburg; WGIB, Scranton; WBRE, Wilkes-Barre.

Senator Grundy spoke as follows: "We are approaching the close of a campaign which, I believe, has aroused the deep interest and considered thought of a very large portion of the electorate of Pennsylvania. Through the radio and the newspapers, by direct speeches, letters and other means, the issues of the contest have been brought before the voters, and their importance or significance emphasized. It is reasonable to hope, therefore, that every voter who possibly can do so, will participate in the Primary Election, which occurs on Tuesday next, May 20th.

"Throughout this presentation of thoughts and canvass for votes, I have tried to emphasize what I consider to be the outstanding issue of this contest—the economic issue of tariff protection for our industries and workers, and therefore having to do with the material welfare of every citizen of the Commonwealth.

"I believe it to be more than ordinarily important that every voter who can do so shall exercise his or her rights of franchise next Tuesday.

"It is not merely a duty to one's self and a responsibility to the State as a whole, but likewise an obligation to all one's fellow citizens. There cannot be complete expression of opinion, and hence there cannot be majority rule, if our people do not assume their electoral responsibilities and exercise those rights according to each individual's own best judgment.

"In Pennsylvania this question of proper tariff protection for our industrial and agricultural enterprises, and their workers, relates to each and every one of us just as intimately as does the right to vote. I think the people of our Commonwealth pretty generally recognize that fact. They know that we have a higher standard of living in this country than prevails anywhere else in the world, and they know that because of that higher standard of living, it costs more to produce things here than it does elsewhere. Naturally, then, we cannot produce products to be sold in this country in open competition with the like products of other countries, and survive such competition. There must be tariff protection, else the foreigner with his great advantage of lower production costs can very much undersell our domestic producers. To put the same fact in a slightly different way, there must be tariff protection for our own products, if the work of the United States is to be kept within the United States.

"Pennsylvania has peculiar need of tariff protection, for not only are we an essentially industrial State, with also a highly developed agriculture, but we are located almost directly on the seaboard, and hence are subject to the full force of foreign competition. That situation in itself should be sufficient to make us ever watchful of our tariff requirements. But when we find matters further complicated by a growing sense of sectionalism among a considerable group of those who have been sent to the upper branch of Congress by western agricultural States, we are having notice served upon us that if we do not look to our own interests in that respect, those interests will be ignored and violated in a way most injurious to ourselves.

"We have had the full and depressing truth of that statement driven home to us by the one-sidedness of the tariff revision which is now about concluded, after deliberations which have covered a period of nearly a year and a half. A coalition consisting upon the one hand of Democrats who do not believe in the American principle of protection, and Western Republicans, upon the other, who are concerned solely with the interests of agriculture, has largely determined the fate of industries in this revision. Practically every tariff need advanced by agriculture has been met, while almost without exception there has been refusal to fully meet the requirements of industry.

"I would call the attention of our people, and especially the attention of our industrial wage-earners, to the fact that this situation is merely emphasizing the inducements which are prompting American capital, and some of our most important American industries, to migrate to foreign countries and the source of cheap labor.

"That migration is a natural, and indeed inevitable, consequence of a most unusual anomaly created by our Congress.

"Upon the one hand we have created and set up a rigid restrictive immigration law, thus shutting out the labor itself which is now located in European and other foreign countries, and upon the other hand we have let down the tariff bars to the entry of the products of that cheap foreign labor. Naturally, our industries suffer severely and in some instances to the point of destruction, from such competition, and, being unable to manufacture successfully here under those conflicting conditions of high labor costs and unfair competitive conditions, they remove their money and their plants abroad, where they have access to the same lower labor costs that are enjoyed by their foreign competitors.

"All of us suffer as a consequence. There is an inevitable shrinkage of the market for our own labor, with a consequent contraction of prosperity which reflects itself through our entire economic system. Those who are thus thrown out of employment become competitors for the jobs of those who are still employed, and there is general disturbance of the economic equilibrium.

"As I have said, Pennsylvania is a first-hand victim of all this, and certainly, therefore, it behooves us to resist every encroachment upon our rights, while fighting with all the power we possess to recover the ground we have lost, and the rights of which we have been deprived.

"Now I have heard a certain gentleman widely quoted as disparaging the tariff, and the importance of the manner in which a tariff is made, while asserting that he is a great friend of the protective principle. He has been quoted as saying that anyone could write a proper tariff law, if merely clothed with the authority to do so. The inference invited by the language is that the gentleman thinks the job could be done overnight, or within a week or so, at best.

"Well, with all due respect to the groups to which such statements have been made—and I am certain that such obvious extravaganzas do not appeal to their intelligence—I think such statements are insults to the names and reputations of such great Americans as Henry Clay and Daniel Webster, William McKinley, Payne and Aldrich, Kelley, Randall and Penrose of Pennsylvania, and every member of the present Congress, with a record of a year and a half behind it in the making of the present tariff bill. "I think such statements show a lack of comprehension of what tariff legislation involves; and an utterance of that sort may be taken as indicative of the seriousness of purpose with which one so minded would approach the task of tariff-making, and at the same time indicates the kind of a tariff law which would be the consequence of such a lack of comprehension, coupled with such a frame of mind.

"No single piece of legislation so widely and profoundly affects our whole national life, and to draft and enact a law which will fully serve its purpose while at the same time applying with equal justice to all sections and all enterprises, is by no means the simple and incidental question which some seem to think, but involves the most difficult problems and all kinds of detailed information, especially concerning our own domestic industries.

"It is, therefore, one of the greatest responsibilities which can devolve

SHOULD SUPPORT SENATOR GRUNDY

Bristol Citizens Publicity Committee for Joseph R. Grundy for United States Senator Issues Statement So As to Better Acquaint the Voters of Bristol With The Importance of Marking Their Ballots for Joseph R. Grundy, A Fellow-Townsmen, for United States Senator, at the Republican Primary Election, May 20

CLIFFORD L. ANDERSON
CHAIRMAN

SECRETARY

TWO more days of the political campaign remain, then the voters of Bristol will have an opportunity to go to the polls and cast their votes for the candidates whom they favor for the various offices. The fact that Bristol, for the first time in its history, has the name of one of its citizens upon the ticket, as a candidate for nomination to the high office of United States Senator, makes this election the most interesting one ever held.

Considering the fact that the office is second only in importance to that of President of the United States, and that Bristol has a distinguished citizen who possesses the qualifications to fill such a high office with credit, should be sufficient reason why every Republican voter should be actuated by a spirit of civic pride, and cast his vote for the Bristol candidate.

The local campaign publicity committee has endeavored during the past week to present the candidacy of a fellow-townsmen, Joseph R. Grundy, for the office of United States Senator, to the voters of Bristol in a manner that would appeal to their civic pride and community spirit of fairness and justice, to one of their own townsmen and fellow-citizens. His elevation to the office of United States Senator will bring honor to the town, as well as to Senator Grundy, and his qualifications for the office, together with the prominence which he has already acquired in national affairs, will give him position and influence which should be appreciated by all of his fellow-townsmen.

The Grundy-Buckman Campaign Committee of Bucks County very aptly stated a few of the outstanding services and qualities of practical leadership which should enlist the whole-hearted support of the voters, and cause them to regard his nomination and election later, as of primary importance to the people of Pennsylvania in particular, and to the nation at large:

"We would call attention to the almost unanimous approval which greeted his appointment by Governor John S. Fisher to fill the vacancy in the State's representation in the Senate; the laudatory comments of politicians, statesmen, newspapers and industrial, educational and other leaders throughout the State; his later championship of the State which aroused the pride of every Pennsylvanian in his citizenship; his unprecedented success in the brief period of three months in his fight to have Congress enact tariff rates which would at least in a measure protect the labor, industrial, agricultural and general business interests of our citizens; the nation-wide recognition of his supremacy as an economist; his knowledge of the needs of agriculture and his championship of relief measures for this important factor in our national life; his fearless, practical and effective service for causes designed to promote the happiness and prosperity of the people of the State and Nation and the absence of any selfish motives which have actuated his public career."

With such qualities of practical leadership, and such outstanding examples of services already rendered to the Nation and to the State of Pennsylvania, it is hard to understand how any citizen of Pennsylvania, and particularly a resident of the town which he calls home, could refuse to vote for Senator Grundy, particularly after he has shown his unselfish devotion to those Republican policies the maintenance of which means so much to Bristol as an industrial town.

Civic pride, community spirit, town unity and the duty we owe to a neighbor, all entreat us to take a firm hold upon the opportunity which has come to us, as the home town of a great statesman, and by giving him our united support at the polls on next Tuesday, show the people of the nation as well as the State, that true merit can be appreciated by us as citizens, and that the Borough of Bristol esteems it a great honor that one of its citizens should have proven himself capable and qualified to fill such an exalted position.

SCHOOL ATHLETES GATHER HERE IN BIG TRACK MEET

Participants Gather From All Sections of Bucks County

EVENTS START EARLY

Results of Contests Are Announced Through Amplifiers to Spectators

Public school athletes from every section of Bucks County are in Bristol today, several hundred taking part in the annual Bucks County Interscholastic Track Meet.

Activities started shortly after nine o'clock, and from that time on the interest grew, friendly rivalry between the contestants from the several schools adding to the day's interest.

Students taking part in events for each of the classes were ready for their events when the time arrived, and the high school field was filled with groups of tots, too small to take part in the contests, as well as students of all ages up to the solemn seniors.

Strangers arriving in Bristol to participate in the meet or those coming as spectators only, were met by details of Boy Scouts of the Bristol troops who obligingly directed the groups, and offered whatever aid possible.

On the high school field, at the sites of the various events the Scouts have been on duty all day, keeping the tracks or needed spaces cleared, and making themselves generally useful.

The events are announced as the time arrives through amplifiers of a "public address system" installed on the second floor of the high school structure through the courtesy of Alfred Tomesani, Mill street. Thus are the events kept before the watchers, and those taking part are always on the alert for the specific contest in which they are interested.

During the early hours the standing broad jump in the several classes for girls was gotten under way; while the older boys vied for honors in the running high jump. The basketball throws attracted much attention as did also the girls' running races.

Officials of the meet were provided with tables placed beneath a tent upon the campus, and here were many of the returns of the races compiled.

From nine o'clock on individuals from many townships and boroughs arrived, and took keen interest in the numbers, finding places along the courses, outside the fence that surrounds the campus, or watched from the windows of the school.

Groups strolled about the grounds taking advantage of the sales of refreshments, or having their pictures taken by men located just inside the gate with cameras.

Yells from the school groups frequently came from one section of the campus and then from another as favorites of certain groups received good placements. Fine backing was most noticeable, and those not able to meet opponents in contests lent encouragement along the side lines.

One Hundred Men Attend Men's Bible Class Meeting

The program consisted of the following:

Singing, led by Ernest Gamble; prayer, Thomas S. Harper; welcome to visitors, Dr. Charles H. Peet; address, Rev. George E. Boswell; Rev. Boswell took as his topic: "Men—Their Place in the Church."

Singing, led by Ernest Gamble; address, "Bible Classes as a Help to the Church," Rev. Paul R. Ronge; address, "The Man and His Bible," Rev. William Yeomans.

The Ernest Gamble Concert Party presented a program of exceptional merit entitled "Musical Portraits." The program was given in two parts.

Address, Leonard B. Mython, Morrisville Presbyterian Church; address, "Application of Bible Teaching in Home Life," Rev. Andrew G. Solla; address, "Application of Christ's Principle in Business," Rev. Howard L. Zepp.

The evening was voted a decided success and the program of entertainment and talks was very entertaining and instructive.

DEMANDS ON GOVERNMENT

From the statement that United States government appropriations increased about 10 times in 40 years there can be built up several theories of explanations. The readiest answer is that the country grows that fast, but probably the real answer is that the federal government is constantly taking over costly jobs.

In 1890 federal appropriations totaled $400,000,000. Now they are $4,000,000,000. The population of the country has not kept pace with that growth, but it is certain that enlistments and conscriptions to the army of jobholders have increased 10 times in four decades.

The people have had a considerable share in building up a $4,000,000,000 government, for they are constantly unloading new duties upon it. The way commissions, departments, bureaus and functions are being added at present means only a still more costly government.

If the public is unwilling to maintain its federal government on the present formidable demands and political patronage. Considerable cuts could be made in government costs if all groups did for themselves the things they now ask the government to do for them. It is because the people, or part of them, want it so that federal and state governments have a hand in everything from killing bugs to uplifting.

HORSE SHOES

It seems as if the game of horse shoes is being indulged in more this year in Bristol than usual, but it could not be spoken of as revival; for this form of sport, going back in principle to the discus throwing of the ancient Greeks, has never been absent within the period of written history. In early England it was known as quoits, with heavy iron rings used, and this name and the use of rings persists to a considerable degree, but horse shoes appear to be the official style in this country.

Quoit pitching became so general in England in the fifteenth century that royal attempts were made to end it in favor of archery. One of the writers of the period speaks of quitoing as "too vile for scholars." It is noted, however, that scholars at picnics still take to it about as keenly as any, while archery, much as there is to be said for its gracefulness and test of skill, still requires efforts to keep it alive. Horse shoes, first used by workingmen for lack of quoits, now are made specially for the game, with regulation weight, and finished as elegantly as desired, in gold bronze, nickel plate or aluminum.

SYNOPSIS

David Wade and Stella Blackney flee from New Guinea to the South Sea island of Motogara to avoid Stella's being claimed, following her mother's death, by O'Shane, to whom she is secretly married and whom she fears and loathes. Stella grows to love David but is not free to marry him. She fears that the half-caste girl, Moira, whom they have taken to live with them at her father's dying request, may win David away from her, for the girl is greatly attracted by David. While their first ship is away to Tema, loaded with copra and pearls, Moira learns that David and Stella are not married.

"What—what do you mean?" Stella stammered. She had expected something of the kind, knowing Moira as she did; nevertheless, the bluntness of the question was disconcerting. "How dare you say such a thing!" she flared.

"Because I think it is true. Is it?"

"This is an insult!"

The half-caste came closer. There was a hard, deep brightness in her eyes, and she was breathing a little heavily and unevenly. She looked at Stella searchingly, her eyes narrowed as though she were focusing them on the other's very soul.

"Ah!" said the half-caste. "It is true. It is no use trying to deceive me! I might have known before. I might have guessed."

Moira turned and took a step towards her; and the manner of her taking the step, and the poise of her, had pascion in them.

"Now you're coming the superior white woman over me! You're no different from the rest, after all! You're all the same, the whole lot of you! I'm only a wretched half-caste! And who are you to order me away? It is not only your house. It is his, too, remember! I wonder if he will be a party to making me move! I wonder!" She paused. "David is not like that—like you superior women!"

Stella flinched. The name David on Moira's lips—it sounded vile. Hitherto he had been always "Mr. Wade," and sometimes, playfully, "Uncle." She looked keenly at the half-caste, wondering if she, too, knew that David could be made susceptible to feminine lures.

Recoils stinging and angered jumped to Stella's mind. But she did not voice them. It was not in keeping with the summoning of her dignity.

"And they say only good can come from love!" she cried bitterly to herself. "I would to God I had never known what love was!"

Followed a week of infinite distress. Moira set out with great deliberateness to attract David. As she was open and direct about everything else, so was she open and direct about this. There was nothing subtle or strategic about her. She was neither coquettish nor disingenuous. She either scorned such methods or knew naught of them. All the abandon that was expressed in her walk and sometimes in her voice came out, and she became the barbarian seeking her mate, a splendid, picturesque barbarian determined on attaining her end.

And David seemed to like it. To Stella's disgust and concern, he made no protest or in any way attempted to discourage the half-caste's attentions.

"You are most unreasonable, Stella!" he said once, when, her pride submerged by the flood of her distress, she furiously accused him of becoming unduly fond of the half-caste. "We are only pals. You wouldn't have me be cold and uncivil towards her, would you?" and she fatherless, motherless, and, except for us, friendless."

"Pals! Do you think I don't know what is going on? Pals! Was it merely palship that made her kiss you—on the lips, too—the other night when you came back from bathing?"

"You saw that?"—frowning.

"I was on the veranda, just above you."

"Spying, eh?"

"I was not"—which was scarcely true. "I was waiting for you to come back to tea. You had been out hours with her, bathing. You go bathing with her every day. And she in a swimming-suit no decent girl—"

"We never stay more than half an hour."

She knew she had exaggerated; but she didn't stop to retract. She was thoroughly worked up. Words rushed from her in a torrent:

"And what about last night, when she had her arms about you and her head on your shoulder? Just after dinner, it was, on the veranda. She thought I didn't see, or perhaps she hoped I did see. She is like that—blatant, horrible. She has no ordinary decency. And what about—oh, a hundred things. The seemingly accidental way she touches you—the way she dresses so as to show off the lines of her body?—the way she looks at you? I've seen that look in other women's eyes and know what it means. You talk of being pals—"

Some time later, when calmer, she rebuked herself for making such a scene. She felt she had lowered herself considerably in David's estimation. She wished fervently she had strength to conceal her feelings.

But she could not conceal them, neither could she suffer in silence. She felt that without an outlet she would go mad.

So it was that one evening she again brought up the subject to David, this time from an angle which she hoped he would appreciate. She decided to tell him the whole story. They were alone in the living-room; Moira had gone to the village to talk with the natives, as often she did.

"I never told you before," she began; "but the very first time I met Moira she told me she had a great aim in life. It was to get a white husband."

He was lighting his pipe, and she waited till he had got it drawing strongly.

"Indeed!" he said, as though the matter were of no great interest to him, and dropped the match into one of the beach-shells they used as ash-trays.

"She was mad on it, David. It was an obsession. She said it would give her status, would remove from her the stigma of being merely a half-caste."

"And last night—she had her head on your shoulder."

was a fool. I have been thinking about it all night. I've remembered all kinds of things—small things, things that seemed to mean nothing at the time. People who are not married never behave the same as people who are. They are bound to betray themselves."

"This is intolerable! You don't know what you are saying!"

Moira laughed a queer little laugh with a sting in it.

"Oh, I know well enough!"

"What has it got to do with you, anyway?" she said. "Surely we can be allowed to manage our own private affairs?" She said it evenly enough, and wondered at her calm.

The half-caste laughed again, and this time there was in the laugh a little of hysteria and a deal of abandon.

"What has it got to do with me?" she repeated. "Listen, I'll tell you something. She came a little closer. Her chin was out-thrust aggressively and it seemed that the droop of her lower lip had grown more pronounced. 'I have often wished he were—what is the word?—eligible. That is it—eligible. He was so exactly the kind of man of my dream and desire—my impossible dream which wasn't so impossible after all! I envied you! I never envied anything so much as I envied you!'"

"Stop! Or I'll tell him of this!"

"And what will he think of you?"

"What, rather, will he think of you?"

"I wish you would tell him! You wouldn't look nice. A jealous woman! there is nothing a man hates more than a jealous woman. Go on; tell him. I'm not afraid of the outcome."

Stella felt it was true. She had no real hold on David. He would almost certainly regard her in an unfavorable light. The biblical phrase concerning nourishing a viper in the bosom came to her.

"And this is how you repay all I have done for you!" she said bitterly.

Moira paid no heed to the reproach. In the face of possible realization of her great desire she had become blatant; and the blatancy rendered her immune to reproach. Stella summoned her dignity.

"I don't wish to hear any more," she said, with a coldness she scarcely felt, and went to the door.

"And of course, it is quite impossible that you continue to live here. You will kindly make other arrangements."

Collier's Ford Bristol

Used Car Value

The Ford Dealer possesses the new car that represents most value for the money. The volume of Ford cars sold proves this. So also does the Ford dealer have the greatest values in used cars. There are many good reasons for this. He is not forced to give excessive trade-in allowances due to the popularity and low price at which the new Ford sells. He works on a smaller discount than any dealer and due to the volume of cars he trades in he must constantly keep them moving.

It will pay you to go to the Ford place first if you are thinking of a used car.

upon any Congress, and to treat it otherwise is not only to show a very great lack of understanding, but a failure as well to appreciate the importance of that question to Pennsylvania.

"The Primary of next Tuesday not only involves the Senatorship in this year of 1930, but the United States Senatorial problem in 1932 and again in 1934. Should a candidate from the western part of the State be nominated and elected the situation would involve a violation of the long established and universally accepted tradition in Pennsylvania that both the eastern and the western sections of the Commonwealth shall have representation in the United States Senate.

"There would inevitably be a return to that principle two years hence, and this, of course, has given rise to the many rumors of promises that have been made to some of those who are actively promoting the so-called Organization ticket. If a disarrangement did not occur in 1932, it would be bound to come up in 1934, when Senator Reed's present term expires, and then either Senator Reed or his colleague would have to step from the picture.

"Pennsylvania is not accustomed to thus changing Senators who have given satisfactory service. The interests of this Commonwealth are best served by that experience and prestige of seniority which comes of continued service in the upper branch of Congress. Under that principle the late Senator Penrose rose to the chairmanship of the Senate Finance Committee, which is the tariff-making committee of the upper branch. And under that principle Pennsylvania Industries and Pennsylvania wage-earners were given that protection which they required by every Republican revision of the tariff.

"The situation is one calling for the serious thought and honest action of the electorate, based upon the broadest knowledge of all considerations that are involved.

"As you know, in my forty years of participation in the public affairs of Pennsylvania and the Republican Party, I never have been an office-seeker. My appointment to the Senate was not by my request. I accepted it only after mature consideration, but, when I did so, I announced that I would be a candidate for the nomination for the balance of the unexpired term in the Primary which is now at hand.

"I am now a candidate and seek your support. If you see this situation as I see it and view Pennsylvania interests and problems as I do, and if, also, you approve of the character of service which I have tried to render the State and Nation in the comparatively short time I have been in the Senate, then I think I am entitled to ask for your support in the primary of Tuesday next.

"If nominated now and elected in November, I am without other commitment than to render to my constituents the very best service of which I am capable, guided by an experience in public affairs which covers more than four decades.

"I thank you for your attention and shall hope to have your support on Tuesday."

HIBERNIANS SNATCH
GAME IN LAST FRAMERoll Up Score of Seven Runs
In the Last
Inning

FINAL COUNT IS 8 TO 7

(By Thomas Juno)

"A ball game is not over until the last man is out."

The old adage was again proved last night on St. Ann's field when the A. G. H. team scored seven runs in the last inning to top the St. Ann's nine, 8-7.

Entering the last frame the "Saints" took the field with the count 7-1 in their favor. Many fans thinking the game was over left the grounds and missed the gallant rally put on by the "Hibbies."

Before a man was out they had tied the score and placed the winning run on third base. Two men were then put out and all seemed over when Holdren lifted an easy fly to Tosti. The ball hit his glove and then bounced out, the first baseman trying to nab it before it struck the ground, but he failed, and the winning run crossed the plate on the error.

Up until the last canto, Whyno had the Hibernians eating from his hand. In the first five frames only three hits were made off his curves. Two of these were scratch hits. He had fanned nine men and appeared on an easy way to victory when suddenly he collapsed and should have been sent to the showers. Manager Sagolla failed to remove him from the mound and so he lasted the game.

The Dorrance street boys made ten hits, three more than the winners. Roe and Missera led the attack on Mangan with two hits each. Roe socked a long triple on his second trip to the plate and on his third trip he came across with a double. One of Missera's hits was a two-bagger.

The "Saints" were charged with six errors, three coming in that everlasting last inning when a six-run lead failed to do any good. Thompson, of the Hibernians, was charged with three errors.

Score by innings:
First—Gilardi flew to Brady; Pico grounded out; Mangan to Sullivan; Angelo sliced a long double to left; Roe hit to Thompson and went out at first.

Connors fanned; Brady lifted a fly to Missera; Leyden struck out.

Second—Missera hit a two-bagger to centerfield; Tosti hit to Mangan and was out at first; Missera reaching third; Spadacino and DiTanna whiffed.

Mangan reached first on Pico's error; Holdren struck out; Thompson's high fly went into Gilardi's mitt; Coyle was strike-out victim number four.

Third—Whyno's roller was handled without trouble by Brady; Gilardi's grounder went to Leyden, who threw the runner out; Angelo hit a roller to short, who threw wild to first; Pico scoring and Angelo reaching second; Roe blasted a Mangan pitch into deep left center for three bases and scored when Thompson missed Connors' throw-in; Missera singled over second; Tosti rolled to short-stop.

McGinley's roller went to Missera, who threw him out; Sullivan tapped to Whyno, who threw to Tosti, retiring the runner; Connors sent a line drive to left; Gilardi got his hands on the ball but could not hold it, the hit going for two bases; Connors stole third and continued home on Oriola's bad peg; Brady breezed.
